In the south of the Syrian capital Damascus, the outskirts of Yarmouk camp for Palestinian refugees was bombarded with mortar shells on Wednesday. The shelling targeted the lines of contact between groups of Jaish Al-Ababeel and ISIS in the Tadamon neighborhood. This came in conjunction with intermittent clashes with light weapons and machine guns between factions counted on the Syrian regime and ISIS, at Nisreen Street.

In the meantime, 2017 saw the aggravation of the suffering of about 400 Palestinian-Syrian refugees stranded on the Greek Islands; Chios, Samos and Lesbos-Mytilene. They have been forced to live in canvas tents between forests and grasslands, because of the lack of adequate spaces and room in the refugee camps.

According to the Palestinian-Syrian refugee testimonies, the density of refugees in the camps and the lack of sufficient space has made their lives miserable and harsh under the tents and among the forests. The camps do not meet the appropriate conditions to protect them from the heat, cold, rain or storms.

Because of the large numbers of refugees and cases submitted, the refugees have to wait for several months before their cases are decided on so they can be transferred to the Greek mainland. This has aggravated their suffering and their feeling of great oppression.

In another context, the organizers of the European Al-Wafa Campaign announced they are ready to launch their first relief campaign for 2018. According to the campaign, these preparations this time are made in coordination with a number of Arab and European organizations to launch “Together for a Warm Winter 7.” The campaign will target the refugee camps and gatherings in Lebanon, Jordan, Turkey and Palestine. Delegates of the campaign will start during the first week of 2018, including members from Austria, the Netherlands, Italy, Germany, Sweden, Denmark, Norway, Belgium, Switzerland and Spain.
