Latest Developments

Hundreds of civilians, activists, and reporters, along with their families and children, headed to Idlib, in northern Syria, after they were forced out of their shelters in Khan Al-Sheih Camp for Palestinian refugees.

The move came as the first bonds of a deal between the Syrian government forces and the opposition battalions were put into effect.

Over recent weeks, the Syrian government army heavily struck Khan Al-Sheih camp with internationally banned weapons and closed off all access roads out of and into the shelter, resulting in acute dearth in food and medicines.

According to AGPS data, five Palestinian refugees housed in Khan Al-Sheih were killed in November.

AGPS identifies the casualties as 14-year-old Shahd Youssef Ismail, killed on November 10, 2016, in an onslaught on Al-Kaziya area, in Khan Al-Sheih; Hussein Al-Hindi Al-Khalidi, killed on November 13, 2016; and Mohamed Muhssin Falah, nicknamed Abu Mahmoud. Refugees Abdul Rahman Abu Qatan and Mohamed Salah Shakoush succumbed to wounds inflicted by an offensive on Khan Al-Sheih.

195 Palestinians taking refuge in Khan Al-Sheih were killed since the outburst of hostilities in war-tattered Syria.

Meanwhile, displaced Palestinian-Syrian refugees continue to launch cries for help over the dire socio-economic conditions they have been made to endure. A swift upsurge in rental fees, estimated at an average of $150 to $350, along with high unemployment rates have made the situation far worse.

Al-Zahira, Al-Maidan, Jaramana, Qudsaya, and Khan Dannun represent the major destinations for the displaced Palestinian refugees.

A study shows that a minimum cost of living in Syria exceeds a monthly rate of 171,000 SL while monthly wages barely rise above 40,000 SL ($80).

The study also indicates that 29% of expenses are allotted to food while 28% are allocated to housing. 9.3% and 7.8% of the budget go respectively to transportation and clothing. The remaining resources cover fees for household items, communication networks, medical treatment, and education, among a handful of other basic needs.

At the same time, homeless Palestinian refugee youths and families continue to face deadly risks on the migration road to Turkey and Europe.

The situation has gone from bad to worse due to the tough restrictions imposed on the Turkish borders.

AGPS kept record of an increase in the number of refugees who have sought asylum overseas due to a set of reasons having mostly to do with mandatory enlistment in the pro-regime Palestine Liberation Army and arbitrary abductions at government checkpoints, forcing hundreds to risk their lives in a mountainous journey towards the unknown.
