Victims

Palestinian youth Suhail Moussa Ali, taking refuge in Khan Dannun Camp, was killed in bloody hostilities between the Syrian regime militias and opposition outfits in Dierkhabiya, in western Damascus Suburbs.

The casualty is an officer at the 4th Armored Division, an elite mercenary of the Syrian Army whose primary purpose is to defend the Syrian government from internal and external threats. The division recruited hundreds of Palestinian refugees to stand in the forefronts of deadly hostilities with opposition squads.

Latest Developments

Reporting from Khan Al-Shih, an AGPS news correspondent said an offensive carried out by the regime Shilka self-propelled tanks left four refugees wounded.

A shell was also slammed into Khan Al-Shih's eastern neighborhood but caused no damage as it did not explode. At the same time, Syrian and Russian warplanes showered the nearby ranches and towns with intensive air raids using the internationally-prohibited cluster bombs. Violent clashes burst out in the outer edges of the camp shortly afterwards.

The onslaught comes at a time when Khan Al-Shih residents sounded distress signals over the tough siege slapped by the Syrian regime army on the camp for the 34th day running. As a result, the refugees have run out of food items, toddler milk, and medicines. The camp has also been subjected to unbroken power and telecommunication outages.

In another development, Palestinian refugee families who have been displaced from Qudsiya town, in Damascus, returned to their homes via the newly-unblocked Qudsiya-Damascus thoroughfare. Foodstuff and flour packages were also dispatched to the camp while local bakeries have been reopened.

Several Palestinian refugees heaved a relief sigh after tension smoothed down in the area. The refugees called for granting them a safe passage into their places of residence, particularly the Yarmouk camp, from which they have been displaced due to the massive shelling and tough blockade.

Unabated blitzing and unremitting hostilities forced hundreds of refugees and displaced Syrian nationals out of Qudsiya town, a home to over 250,000 residents, including 6,000 Palestinian families, mostly residents of Yarmouk Camp. Onslaughts by the Syrian regime militias on Qudsiya took away the lives of a number of refugees, among whom women and children.

Meanwhile, the Palestinian refugee Ramiya Khalil Subhiya, a resident of Al-Aydeen Camp in Homs, was released from the Syrian regime penitentiaries, where she had been locked up for over one year.

Residents of the Homs-based Al-Aydeen Camp have been subjected to frequent crackdowns, abduction sweeps, abrupt inspections, and random royalties by the regime troops, forcing refugees to seek shelter overseas.
