Moreover, the Palestinian refugee "Majd Mahmoud," from Khan Dannon Camp in Damascus suburb, was killed during clashes, while the AGPS was not able to document the scene.

Recent Updates

A number of activists in the Yarmouk camp in Damascus confirmed to the AGPS that they were subjected to death threats by members of the so-called ISIS if they cover the violation of its members in Yarmouk.

For his part, our correspondent inside the camp confirmed that the media work inside the camp became too dangerous, prompting dozens of activists to leave.

He also pointed out that the news of "ISIS" robbery of more than "3000" liters of fuel that was allocated to drinking water pumps had angered ISIS that has threatened the rest of activists who were suspected of transfer news.

Our correspondent noted that "ISIS" supports two methods in dealing with activists; intimidation and enticement by providing aid or money.

It is worth mentioning that ISIS had stormed the Yarmouk refugee camp on April after facilities provided by Al Nusra Front who was inside the camp.

On the other hand, warplanes targeted Muzeireeb compound in Daraa province, southern Syria, which home to about 8500 Palestinian refugees, with four explosive barrels, which killed at least one victim and a number of wounded, in addition to the massive destruction of buildings and properties.

Statements of "Abbas Zaki," member of the Central Committee of Fatah, which he provided yesterday to a Palestinian agency about the resumption of relations between his movement and the Syrian regime soon, provoked a wave of angry comments and reactions among the ranks of the Palestinian Syrian refugees.

One commentator says, "They have sold the Palestinians in Syria and reconciled."

Another one adds "Now we know that the cause of the frequent visits of Fatah delegation to Syria was for relations and real estate not for neutralize the camps and the release of detainees."

Meanwhile, others have accused Fatah movement "that it sells its sons and martyrs in Syria, most of whom were killed by the Syrian regime."

Others said, "that Fatah leaderships has provided the blood of Palestinian Syrians as an offering to the Syrian regime," while others denounced the lack of Zaki's knowledge of names of Palestinian refugee camps in Syria, mocking that "How could a dealer does not know where his goods are; where are Eshbiba and Jabeiya camps that he talked about in the interview??"

Turning to Lebanon, the Lebanese Association for Support Scientific Research" announced about providing (500) college scholarships at Lebanon universities for the academic year 2015-2016. The Association put several conditions to accept students applying for the grant, which are: the student should be Syria or displaced Palestinian Syrian in Lebanon, the student should have a baccalaureate equation of the Ministry of Higher Education in Lebanon.

In the same context, Director General of UNRWA in Lebanon, Mr. Matthias Schmaly, held a meeting the day before yesterday with a number of Palestinians of Syria committees, representatives of the Palestinian factions, and civil committees in Ain al-Hilweh refugee camp. The meeting aimed to discuss the situation of Palestinian refugees and the displaced Palestinians of Syria in Lebanon, and to inform the Palestinian factions about the financial shortages of UNRWA and declining services and ways of working to overcome the current situation.

In turn, the Palestinian factions stressed the need that UNRWA should assume full responsibilities towards the Palestinian refugees in general, and Palestinians of Syria in particular because they are exposed to a real tragedy caused by the reflection of war manifestations related to the humanitarian and economic situation.

The Palestinian factions and civil work committees renewed their refusal about the recent decisions taken by UNRWA regarding cut off shelter allowance aid for the displaced Palestinians of Syria in Lebanon, and cut financial assistance for about 1,200 Palestinian Syrian families.
