Latest Developments

Speaking with AGPS on-the-spot reporter, residents of Khan Al-Sheih Camp for Palestinian refugees, in Damascus Suburbs, lamented the deportation of relief activists and human rights advocates from the camp, saying their homes have been subjected to bribery and arson attacks as soon as activists were forced out of the camp.

They added that over the past five years, activists served as protective coverings against such assaults on their own and only shelters.

A deal struck between the government forces and the opposition fighters led to the retreat of over 2,000 civilians, including activists and journalists, from the camp.

Snapshots and videos leaked from the camp show live instances of furniture theft by pro-government militias in daylight.

Khan Al-Sheih residents also slammed the government troops deployed at military checkpoints for turning their back on civilians and for their apathy as regards the aggravated burglary cases.

In another development, the Syrian regime battalions at predawn time on Wednesday struck the Al-Sadd Road, in Deraa, with a gas cylinder and artillery shells, resulting in remarkable material damage.

Palestinian refugee families in southern Syria have been enduring tough socio-economic conditions due to the raging warfare and the swift hike in unemployment rates. Several refugees have reportedly been on the verge of death due to the acute shortage in much-needed food items and medicines.

Meanwhile, the mother of the injured Palestinian refugee Ahmad Moussa, 31, launched cries for help after her son's health condition has taken a serious turn for the worse.

Moussa, a former resident of Yarmouk who is currently taking refuge in the southern Lebanese province of Al-Kharroub, sustained critical injuries in a motorcycle accident in Al-Marj town some 30 days ago.

His mother said right after the accident he was evacuated to the Central Hospital in Mazboud area, where he received treatment for four days. She later transferred him to the Sidon-based Al-Hamshari Hospital due to the steep treatment fees.

Ahmad underwent a scanner but medics refused to provide him with any further treatment after the family failed to shell out the medical charges. The patient will only regain admission into the hospital if the family pays $2,000 for a device instilled in his face to repair the fractures inflicted by the motor vehicle crash.

His mother appealed to the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO), the Palestinian factions and charities in Lebanon, and all other concerned parties, to urgently step in and help the family secure the remaining $1,500 after UNRWA donated only $500.

The mother also said several charities and relief bodies renege on their promises to rally around her wounded son.

AGPS documented the death of 17 Palestinian refugees due to war-related incidents in Syria in November 2016, compared to 10 in November 2015.

As for the geographical distribution of the casualties, Rural Damascus topped the list with 12 refugees, followed by two in Aleppo, one in Damascus, and others across different Syrian provinces.

The number of Palestinian refugees killed since the outbreak of hostilities in Syria has hit 3,402 refugees.
