Latest Developments

AGPS documented the death of 454 Palestinian female refugees in the beleaguered Syrian territory due to warfare, the blockade, hostilities, and torture in Syrian government jails.

The group also kept record of the detention of 77 Palestinian female refugees in Syrian regime lock-ups, most of whom have had unknown fates.

The overall death toll of Palestinian refugees in Syria has gone up as high as 3,385 while the number of detainees has hit 1,118.

In another development, Khan Al-Shih's surrounding ranches were subjected at the crack of dawn on Wednesday to heavy shelling using explosive barrels, missiles, and artilleries. Deadly clashes burst out between Syrian rebels and government outfits across the nearby Darousha flashpoint.

Meanwhile reports emerged in Damascus outskirts on the involvement of units from the Palestine Liberation Army (PLA) in the ongoing offensives and the blockade on Khan Al-Shih Camp for Palestinian refugees. Pro-regime PLA units have reportedly been assisting the government forces in tightening the noose around refugees' neck in the area.

Families of PLA officers and enlisted refugee recruits in Syria have often voiced their firm rebuff of underway attempts to drag their children into ongoing hostilities. Several Palestinian refugees refused mandatory military enlistment and have sought asylum in other countries for fear of being kidnapped and killed.

In another development, bread packages were delivered by the Palestine Relief Department to the residents of Yarmouk Camp who have been displaced to the nearby towns of Yalda, Babilla, and Beit Sahem. The move was carried out following a hiatus of one month and a half due to disagreements between the Yarmouk Committee and the Syrian Red Crescent over the quantity and quality of bread.

ISIS and Fatah Al-Sham militias have been taking hold of the camp at the same time as a tight blockade has been imposed by the government battalions for over 1,240 days. The regime forces have also cut off power and water supplies to the camp. At least 190 refugees were killed due to undernourishment and medical neglect in the camp.

Meanwhile, residents of Al-Husseiniya Camp have sounded cries for help over the frequent power outages for up to 12 hours a day. Their appeals for an urgent intervention have gone almost unheeded while none of the promises made by the local municipality and pro-government civil committees to secure electricity have seen the day.

On August 16, 2015, a number of displaced Palestinian refugee families returned to Al-Husseiniya Camp following a two-year ban slapped by the Syrian regime militias.

In the meantime, the Lebanese Association for Humanitarian Assistance, in partnership with the Refugees' Fund Committee, handed out on Saturday and Sunday winter clothes to a number of Palestinian and Syrian refugees displaced from war-tattered Syria in the Lebanon-based Ein Al-Hilweh Camp.

Some 726 Palestinian-Syrian families have been taking shelter in Ein Al-Hilweh refugee camp in the southern Lebanese city of Sidon.
