Latest Developments

AGPS confirms that the Palestinian-Syrian refugee is still banned from entering most of the Arab and Islamic countries, such as Lebanon, Jordan, Egypt, the Arab Maghreb countries and Turkey, only under conditions that are not possible for the Palestinian-Syrian refugees.

The Jordanian and Turkish authorities continue to prevent the entry of Palestinian refugees from Syria into their territories, while the Turkish embassies have stopped issuing entry visas to Palestinian-Syrians for more than three years, without giving reasons. Meanwhile, the Jordanian government issued an official decision which bans the entry of Palestinian refugees from Syria, for whatever reason.

While the entry of Palestinian-Syrians into Lebanon is very difficult because of the tight procedures imposed by the Lebanese authorities on their entry, and the public security dealing with them depending on their mood.

In addition, the Gulf Arab states have stopped issuing visas to Palestinian-Syrian refugees since the beginning of 2013.

For its part, the Action Group called on all neighboring countries to lift their restrictions on the entry of Palestinian-Syrian refugees to their territories, and to abide by the international conventions that stipulate that all neighboring countries of war must receive and not interfere with the entry of those fleeing the conflict, into their territory.

In southern Syria, unidentified gunmen released the 40-year-old Palestinian refugee, Manhal Homeida, from the town of Muzayrib in Deraa. He had been kidnapped from the Muzayrib-Tell Shehab Road on 31-10-2017.

It should be noted that the kidnappers had demanded a ransom of $ 200,000 for the release of Homeida.

In a different context, the regime's army's barriers allowed a number of "mazut" tanks to enter Khan Al-Sheih camp for Palestinian refugees in the suburbs of Damascus. This came after an agreement between the camp's police station and the municipality, and included selling the fuel in the western lanes of the camp. Each house was allowed 100 liters of mazut, costing 190 Syrian pounds for one liter.

In Lebanon, the Charitable Association for Palestinian Relief, in cooperation with the Guidance and Reform charity, distributed winter clothes to the displaced Palestinian-Syrian families in Wady Al-Zeina, in the province of Al-Kharroub, south of Lebanon. The Association's representative confirmed that 160 families in Wady Al-Zeina benefited from the distribution which targeted the displaced families in the area and some families from the local community.

The number of displaced Palestinian-Syrian families in Wady Al-Zeina, south of Lebanon, is estimated at 450 families, out of 42 thousand Palestinian-Syrian refugees that fled to Lebanon, to escape the ongoing war in Syria.
